KEEPING WEDDING GUESTS COOL

When James Brown built one of the South West's leading wedding venue's he looked at using air conditioning to keep the large open plan venue cool when upto 200 people were dancing and enjoying themselves.

However, due to the capital cost and running costs he looked at alternatives and instead installed the Celsius system of 2 no. roof mounted evaporative chillers ducted down to ceiling mounted discharge grills. The extraction from the area is provided by the peripheral doors and windows.

The system has worked perfectly in keeping everyone cool on even the hottest days. We also fitted the gas fired warm air heating for the winter weddings.

The building is a standard truss construction with tiled roof and red brick walls, the inside has been lined with Muslin to give the impression of a Wedding Marquee, however, this is one wedding Marquee that is at the perfect temperature year round no matter how vigorous the celebrations.
